Research Summary

Bentonite is a type of clay mineral that is primarily composed of montmorillonite, a soft and absorbent aluminum phyllosilicate. It is formed from the weathering and decomposition of volcanic ash over time. Bentonite has unique properties that make it widely used in various industries and applications. It has high swelling capacity and water absorption ability, which makes it ideal for use as a binding agent, thickener, and stabilizer in industries such as construction, foundry, drilling, and agriculture. In construction, bentonite is used in the formulation of drilling fluids, sealants, and geosynthetic clay liners to provide water impermeability and soil stabilization. It is also utilized in the production of ceramics, paints, cosmetics, and pharmaceuticals due to its rheological properties and ability to absorb impurities. Additionally, bentonite is commonly employed in wastewater treatment, cat litter, and as a clarifying agent in the brewing and wine industry. Its versatile nature and abundant availability make bentonite a valuable mineral with a wide range of industrial applications.

The major global manufacturers of Bentonite include Amcol, Bentonite Performance Minerals, Wyo-Ben Inc, Black Hills Bentonite, Tolsa Group, Imerys (S&B), Clariant,
