Research Summary

BOPE film stands for Biaxially Oriented Polyethylene (BOPE) film. It is a type of plastic film made from polyethylene resin that has been stretched both in the machine direction (MD) and the transverse direction (TD) to improve its mechanical properties. This biaxial orientation process enhances the film's strength, stiffness, clarity, and barrier properties, making it suitable for a wide range of packaging applications. BOPE films are commonly used in flexible packaging for food, beverages, personal care products, pharmaceuticals, and industrial goods. They offer excellent moisture barrier properties, resistance to puncture and tearing, and high optical clarity, which helps to showcase the packaged products. Additionally, BOPE films are recyclable, lightweight, and have a low carbon footprint, making them a sustainable choice for packaging solutions.
