Research Summary

Carob bean gum, also known as locust bean gum, is a natural food additive derived from the seeds of the carob tree (Ceratonia siliqua). It is widely used in the food industry as a thickening, stabilizing, and gelling agent. Carob bean gum is a polysaccharide composed of galactomannans, which are long chains of sugars. It has excellent water-holding properties, making it effective in preventing the formation of ice crystals and improving the texture and mouthfeel of frozen desserts. Carob bean gum is commonly used in a variety of food products, including ice cream, yogurt, sauces, dressings, bakery goods, and beverages. It helps create a smooth and creamy texture, enhance viscosity, and improve the stability and shelf life of food products. Carob bean gum is considered a natural ingredient and is often used as an alternative to other hydrocolloids or synthetic thickeners. Its versatility and functional properties make carob bean gum a valuable additive in the food industry, contributing to the overall quality and sensory experience of many processed foods.
