Research Summary

Cement is a powdered binder material, typically gray in color, that is used as a fundamental building material in construction. It is composed of a mixture of finely ground minerals, primarily limestone, clay, and gypsum, which are heated in a kiln to produce a powdery substance known as clinker. The clinker is then finely ground to form cement powder. When mixed with water, cement undergoes a chemical reaction known as hydration, which results in a paste-like substance that hardens over time and binds together other construction materials, such as sand, gravel, and aggregates, to form concrete. Cement is a vital component in the construction industry, serving as the key binding agent in a variety of applications, from building foundations, roads, and bridges to dams, skyscrapers, and other infrastructure projects. Its versatility, strength, and durability make cement an essential material for modern construction, contributing significantly to the development and expansion of urban landscapes worldwide.

The major global manufacturers of Cement include CNBM, Anhui Conch Cement, Tangshan Jidong Cement, BBMG, China Resources Cement Holdings, Shanshui Cement, Hongshi Group, Taiwan Cement, Asia Cement (China), Tianrui Group Cement,
