Research Summary

Collagen is the most abundant protein in the human body, constituting a major component of connective tissues like skin, bones, tendons, ligaments, and cartilage. It provides structural support and strength to various body parts, maintaining skin elasticity and promoting joint flexibility. Collagen molecules form long chains and create a mesh-like structure that gives tissues their resilience and durability. As we age, collagen production naturally declines, leading to the development of wrinkles, joint stiffness, and other signs of aging. Because of its essential role in maintaining tissue integrity, collagen is widely used in various industries, including skincare, medical treatments, and food supplements. In skincare products, collagen is often included to promote skin hydration and reduce signs of aging. As a supplement, collagen is available in various forms, including powders, capsules, and drinks, to support joint health and overall well-being.

The major global manufacturers of Collagen include Rousselot, Gelita, PB Gelatins, Nitta, Weishardt, Neocell, BHN, NIPPI, Cosen Biochemical, Taiaitai, SEMNL Biotechnology, HDJR, HaiJianTang, Dongbao, Huayan Collagen, Mingrang, Hailisheng,
