Research Summary

Composite filling is a dental restoration material used to repair teeth that have been affected by decay, fractures, or minor damage. It is a tooth-colored resin material composed of a mixture of plastic and fine glass particles. Dentists use composite fillings to restore the natural appearance and functionality of a tooth while providing a strong and durable solution. The process involves removing the decayed or damaged part of the tooth, preparing the cavity, and then filling it with the composite material. Once placed, the composite filling is hardened using a special light, creating a secure bond with the tooth structure. Composite fillings are preferred by many patients due to their aesthetic appeal, as they closely match the color of natural teeth and blend seamlessly into the smile. Additionally, they offer improved adhesive properties compared to traditional amalgam fillings, resulting in less removal of healthy tooth structure during placement.
