Research Summary

Copiers, also known as photocopiers or copy machines, are essential office devices used to reproduce documents and images quickly and efficiently. They work by using light and electrostatic charges to create duplicate copies of the original document placed on the copier's glass or fed through an automatic document feeder. The copier's optical system scans the document, converting it into an electrical image, which is then transferred onto a photosensitive drum. The drum is coated with a toner, a fine powder that sticks to the charged areas, forming a replica of the original image. The toner is then transferred onto a sheet of paper, heated to fuse the toner onto the paper's surface, producing a permanent copy. Modern copiers often offer various features, such as duplex printing, color copying, and scanning capabilities, making them versatile tools for document management and reproduction in business environments and beyond.

The major global manufacturers of Copiers include Xerox, Canon, Ricoh, Konica Minolta, Sharp, Toshiba, Kyocera, HP, Brother International, DELL, Panasonic, Lexmark, Epson, Oki Data, etc. The global players competition landscape in this report is divided into three tiers.
