Research Summary

Copper clad laminate (CCL) and prepreg are essential materials in the manufacturing of printed circuit boards (PCBs). Copper clad laminate is a composite material composed of a thin layer of copper foil bonded to a rigid or flexible substrate material, typically made of fiberglass-reinforced epoxy resin. The copper foil provides the conductive pathways for electrical signals on the PCB. Prepreg, on the other hand, is a layer of partially cured epoxy resin that is impregnated with glass fiber. Prepreg is used to bond multiple layers of copper clad laminates together during the PCB manufacturing process. When heated during the PCB fabrication, the epoxy resin in the prepreg fully cures and bonds the copper clad laminates, creating a solid and reliable multilayer PCB structure. Copper clad laminate and prepreg are vital components in modern PCB manufacturing, allowing for the creation of complex multilayer circuit boards used in a wide range of electronic devices and applications.
