Unlike traditional load-bearing walls, curtain walls do not carry the weight of the building; instead, they serve as a decorative and protective element. Curtain walls are typically made of lightweight materials like aluminum, glass, or composite panels, allowing for large expanses of glazing that offer natural light and views to the interior spaces. The curtain wall system is designed to withstand wind and weather forces while providing thermal insulation and enhancing the building's energy efficiency. It is a versatile solution that can be customized to fit various architectural designs and aesthetics, offering architects and designers the flexibility to create striking facades and innovative building envelopes.
