Research Summary

Cut wire shot is a type of abrasive media used for surface preparation and finishing applications. It is made by cutting wire into small, cylindrical pellets of consistent length. The cut wire shot is available in various sizes and materials, such as carbon steel, stainless steel, and aluminum. This abrasive media is used in shot blasting and peening processes to remove rust, scale, paint, and other surface contaminants from metal surfaces and prepare them for further treatment or coating. Cut wire shot provides a uniform and precise impact on the surface, resulting in a clean and smooth finish without causing damage or deformation to the substrate. It is commonly used in industries like automotive, aerospace, foundries, and metal fabrication, where precision surface preparation and finishing are critical for achieving high-quality and durable products. The selection of the appropriate cut wire shot size and material depends on the specific surface condition, desired finish, and the hardness of the metal being treated.
