Research Summary

Demineralized Bone Matrix (DBM) is a biologically active bone graft material used in medical and dental procedures to promote bone regeneration and healing. It is derived from human or animal bone that has undergone a process of demineralization to remove the inorganic minerals, leaving behind the organic bone matrix. DBM is rich in growth factors, collagen, and other proteins that play a vital role in supporting the body's natural bone healing process. When used as a bone graft, DBM provides a scaffold for new bone growth and acts as a biocompatible filler to replace or augment bone in areas with bone defects or insufficiencies. DBM is commonly used in orthopedic surgeries, spinal fusion procedures, dental implant surgeries, and other bone grafting applications. Its osteoinductive and osteoconductive properties make it a valuable tool in promoting bone regeneration and enhancing the success of various bone healing and reconstruction procedures.
