Research Summary

Dock decking refers to the specialized flooring material used to construct the surface of docks and marine structures. It's designed to withstand the unique challenges posed by exposure to water, sunlight, and constant foot traffic. Dock decking materials come in various types, including wood, composite, PVC, and metal options. Wood decking, like pressure-treated lumber or hardwoods, offers a traditional aesthetic but requires maintenance to prevent decay. Composite and PVC decking are popular for their durability, resistance to moisture, and low maintenance requirements. Metal decking, such as aluminum or steel, offers strength and longevity, often used for commercial docks. The choice of dock decking depends on factors like the dock's location, the level of maintenance desired, aesthetic preferences, and the intended use of the structure.
