Research Summary

A fax machine, short for facsimile machine, is a device used for transmitting printed or handwritten documents over a telephone line. It works by scanning the document and converting it into digital data, which is then transmitted as audio-frequency tones through a telephone line to a receiving fax machine at the recipient's location. The receiving fax machine decodes the transmitted data and reproduces the document on paper, effectively creating a duplicate copy of the original document. Fax machines were widely used in business and communication before the advent of email and digital document sharing. While their use has declined with the rise of digital technology, fax machines are still utilized in some industries and for specific legal or document-sensitive purposes where physical copies or signatures are required.

The major global manufacturers of Fax Machine include Panasonic, Canon, BROTHER, Philips, SAMSUNG, Sharp, Ricoh, Fuji Xerox, Lenovo, TOEC, Xococo, HP, Lexmark, Muratec, Sagemcom, EPSON, Kyocera, Cimsun tech, Jinheng Technology, etc. The global players competition landscape in this report is divided into three tiers.
