Research Summary

A Flexible Intermediate Bulk Container (FIBC), commonly referred to as a bulk bag, bulk sack, or super sack, is a large and flexible industrial packaging container designed for transporting and storing bulk materials. FIBCs are typically made from woven polypropylene or other heavy-duty fabrics and can vary in size and design. They are characterized by their capacity to hold a significant amount of dry or bulk materials, such as grains, powders, chemicals, and various granular products. FIBCs often feature lift loops for handling by forklifts or cranes and can be customized with different top and bottom configurations to suit specific applications. These containers are cost-effective, efficient, and environmentally friendly, as they reduce the need for smaller packaging and minimize waste. FIBCs find extensive use in industries like agriculture, chemicals, construction, and food processing for their ability to transport and store large quantities of materials safely and conveniently.
