Research Summary

Fiber Reinforced Cement Board, often abbreviated as FRCB, is a construction material composed of cement reinforced with embedded fibers, typically made from materials like cellulose, glass, or synthetic fibers. This composite material offers enhanced strength, durability, and flexibility compared to traditional cement boards. Fiber reinforcement improves the board's resistance to cracking, impact, and moisture, making it suitable for various construction and architectural applications. Fiber Reinforced Cement Board is commonly used in building facades, interior walls, ceilings, and as a substrate for tile or stone finishes, providing a stable and durable surface that can withstand a range of environmental conditions while offering ease of installation and long-term structural integrity.
