Research Summary

A floor hinge, also known as a floor spring or floor pivot, is a mechanical device used in the installation of doors, particularly glass doors, where a concealed and controlled closing mechanism is desired. This hinge is typically installed in the floor underneath the door, allowing it to swing open and close smoothly. Floor hinges are commonly used in commercial and high-end architectural settings where aesthetics, functionality, and space utilization are crucial. They provide a clean and unobtrusive appearance as the hinge is concealed, allowing for a seamless and modern design. The floor hinge not only facilitates the controlled closing of the door but also often includes features for adjusting the speed and force of the closing action. It is a popular choice for applications where a hydraulic or spring-loaded closing mechanism is preferred to ensure smooth door operation.
