Research Summary

Foam sandwich panels are composite building materials that consist of three layers: two outer layers, typically made of thin and rigid materials like metal or fiberglass, and a core layer composed of foam insulation. The outer layers provide structural strength and protection, while the foam core contributes insulation properties, making these panels efficient for both structural and thermal purposes. The combination of these layers creates a lightweight yet sturdy construction material that is widely used in various industries, including construction, aerospace, and automotive. Foam sandwich panels are valued for their high strength-to-weight ratio, thermal insulation capabilities, and versatility in design and application. They are often employed in the construction of walls, roofs, and floors in buildings, as well as in the manufacturing of vehicles and other structures where the balance of strength and weight is critical.

The major global manufacturers of Foam Sandwich Panels include Kingspan, Metecno, Cornerstone Building Brands, Nikkei Panel, Assan Panel, ArcelorMittal, Isopan, TATA Steel, Lattonedil, Nippon Steel Coated Sheet Corporation, Jiangsu Jingxue,
