Research Summary

Gabion boxes are wire mesh containers typically filled with stones or other durable materials and used for various civil engineering and landscaping applications. These structures are commonly employed for erosion control, slope stabilization, and retaining wall construction. Gabion boxes are made of galvanized steel or other corrosion-resistant materials, forming a mesh network that provides flexibility and strength. The wire mesh containers are assembled on-site, filled with stones, and then securely closed to create a robust and permeable structure. The permeability of gabion boxes allows for natural water drainage while preventing soil erosion. Their versatility and effectiveness make gabion boxes popular in civil engineering projects, landscaping, and environmental applications, offering a durable and sustainable solution for stabilizing soil and preventing erosion in diverse settings.
