Research Summary

Gelatin is a protein derived from collagen, a natural protein found in animal connective tissues such as skin, bones, and tendons. The process of extracting gelatin involves breaking down collagen through a series of heating and water extraction steps. Once extracted, gelatin is commonly used as a gelling agent in the food industry, contributing to the texture of various products such as desserts, candies, and gummy snacks. It is also utilized in the pharmaceutical and cosmetic industries for its gelling, thickening, and stabilizing properties. Gelatin has been a traditional ingredient in culinary and industrial applications for centuries due to its versatile properties, and it is available in various forms, including sheets, granules, and powder.
