Research Summary

Halal food refers to food and beverages that comply with Islamic dietary laws as prescribed in the Quran. The term "Halal" in Arabic means permissible or lawful, and Halal food adheres to specific guidelines governing the sourcing, preparation, and consumption of food by Muslims. Permissible foods include those that are free from pork and its by-products, alcohol, and other prohibited ingredients. The slaughter of animals for Halal meat must be performed by a Muslim using a specific method known as "Zabiha," involving the humane and ritual slaughter of the animal while reciting prayers. The concept of Halal extends beyond the ingredients to cover the overall integrity of the food production process. Halal food is not only a religious requirement but also a reflection of Islamic principles related to ethics, cleanliness, and the well-being of individuals.
