Research Summary

An LDS (Laser Direct Structuring) antenna is a type of antenna technology used in electronic devices, particularly in wireless communication applications such as smartphones, tablets, and IoT devices. LDS antennas are manufactured using a laser structuring process that selectively activates the surface of a plastic substrate with a conductive material, typically copper, to create intricate antenna patterns. This process allows for the integration of antennas directly onto the device's plastic housing, eliminating the need for separate antenna components and reducing manufacturing complexity and costs. LDS antennas offer advantages such as compact size, improved signal performance, and enhanced design flexibility, enabling manufacturers to optimize space utilization and antenna performance in compact electronic devices while maintaining aesthetic appeal.

The major global manufacturers of LDS Antenna include Molex (Koch Industries), Shenzhen Sunway Communication, Amphenol, TE Connectivity, Pulse Electronics (Yageo), Huizhou Speed Wireless Technology, Galtronics (Baylin Technologies), Skycross, SelectConnect (Arlington Plating), Luxshare Precision Industry, Inpaq, Tongda, etc. The global players competition landscape in this report is divided into three tiers.
