Research Summary

Molasses is a thick, dark syrup that is produced as a byproduct of the sugar refining process. It is derived from cane sugar or sugar beet juice that undergoes several rounds of boiling and extraction to remove the sugar crystals. The resulting syrup contains a concentrated mixture of sugar, water, and various minerals and compounds. Molasses comes in different varieties, such as light, dark, and blackstrap, each with varying levels of sweetness and flavor intensity. Light molasses is the result of the first boiling and retains a higher sugar content, while dark and blackstrap molasses are produced from subsequent boilings and have a more robust flavor and lower sugar content. Molasses is commonly used as a sweetener in baking and cooking, providing a distinct rich, caramel-like taste to dishes, desserts, and marinades. It is also used in the production of rum, as a livestock feed additive, and even as a natural remedy for certain ailments due to its mineral content.

The major global manufacturers of Molasses include Guangxi Nanning East Asia Sugar Group, Nanning Sugar Industry, Guangxi Yangpu Nanhua Sugar Industry, Dongguan Donta Group, Guangxi Nongken Sugar Industria, COFCO TUNHE SUGAR, Guangxi
