Research Summary

Monazite is a rare earth phosphate mineral that typically contains a combination of various rare earth elements such as cerium, lanthanum, neodymium, and praseodymium. It has a reddish-brown to tan color and is commonly found in beach sands, alluvial deposits, and granite rocks. Monazite is valued for its high concentration of rare earth elements, which are vital for a wide range of modern technologies including electronics, renewable energy systems, and defense applications. The mineral is also a source of thorium and uranium, which are important in nuclear fuel production. Due to its economic and strategic significance, monazite has been mined for its rare earth content in countries such as Brazil, India, Australia, and China. However, the extraction and processing of monazite must be carried out carefully to mitigate environmental and health risks associated with the radioactive elements it contains.

The major global manufacturers of Monazite include Hongyuan Rare Earth, Xiangjiang River Rare Earth, Shenghe Resources, etc. The global players competition landscape in this report is divided into three tiers.
