Research Summary

Nepheline syenite is a naturally occurring igneous rock composed primarily of the minerals nepheline and feldspar. It is typically light-colored, ranging from white to gray, and has a medium to coarse-grained texture. Nepheline syenite is rich in sodium and potassium, making it an alkali-rich rock. It is often used as a raw material in various industries, including ceramics, glass, and construction. Due to its unique chemical composition, nepheline syenite is valued for its ability to enhance the properties of other materials. In ceramics, it acts as a flux, promoting melting and improving the workability of clay bodies and glazes. In glass production, it serves as a flux and can replace soda ash, reducing the melting temperature and energy requirements. In construction materials, nepheline syenite is used as a filler and extender, enhancing strength and durability in applications such as concrete and coatings. Its versatility and compatibility with different industrial processes make nepheline syenite a valuable resource in various applications.

The major global manufacturers of Nepheline Syenite include Unimin (Covia), Sibelco
