Research Summary

Nonflammable nonwoven refers to a type of nonwoven fabric that is designed and treated to be resistant to igniting and sustaining combustion. Nonwoven fabrics are manufactured by bonding or interlocking fibers to form a sheet or web-like structure without the need for weaving or knitting. In the case of nonflammable nonwovens, specific flame retardant additives or treatments are applied to the fabric during the manufacturing process to enhance its fire-resistant properties. These additives or treatments can help reduce the fabric's flammability, slow down the spread of flames, or even self-extinguish when exposed to fire or heat sources. Nonflammable nonwovens find applications in various industries where fire safety is a critical concern, such as protective clothing, upholstery, filtration systems, automotive interiors, building materials, and other areas where fire prevention and flame resistance are essential. The use of nonflammable nonwovens contributes to improved safety, reduced fire hazards, and compliance with fire safety regulations and standards.
