Research Summary

Paint remover, also known as paint stripper, is a chemical or solvent-based product used for the removal of old paint, varnish, or coatings from surfaces like wood, metal, or concrete. It works by breaking down the paint's adhesion to the substrate, allowing for easy removal. Paint removers are available in various formulations, including liquid, gel, or paste, each designed to target different types of paint or coatings. Some paint removers are designed to be applied and then scraped or peeled off, while others can be washed away with water.
