Research Summary

Pallet pooling, also known as pallet rental or pallet leasing, is a supply chain and logistics strategy in which companies use pallets owned and managed by a third-party provider rather than purchasing and maintaining their own pallet inventory. In a pallet pooling system, businesses rent pallets for a specific period or per use, and when the pallets are no longer needed, they are returned to the pool provider. Pallet pooling is designed to improve pallet management efficiency, reduce pallet-related costs, and enhance sustainability by minimizing pallet waste. It offers a cost-effective and flexible solution for companies with fluctuating or seasonal pallet requirements, as they can adjust the number of pallets needed without the burden of ownership, maintenance, or disposal. This approach also promotes pallet standardization, ensuring that compatible pallets are available across various supply chain partners, making transportation and handling more seamless and cost-efficient.
