Research Summary

Plastic filler masterbatch is a type of additive used in the plastics industry to modify and enhance the properties of plastic materials. Comprising a high concentration of filler materials, such as calcium carbonate, talc, or other mineral-based compounds, combined with a carrier resin, this masterbatch is incorporated into the plastic during the manufacturing process. The primary purpose of plastic filler masterbatch is to improve the mechanical and thermal properties of the plastic, including stiffness, impact resistance, and heat stability. Additionally, filler masterbatches can offer economic benefits by reducing the overall material costs and enhancing processability. These masterbatches find applications in a wide range of plastic products, including films, pipes, and molded items, contributing to improved performance and cost-efficiency in plastic manufacturing.
