Research Summary

Portland pozzolan cement (PPC) is a type of hydraulic cement that combines Portland cement clinker with a pozzolanic material, often fly ash. The addition of pozzolans enhances the cement's properties by contributing to improved durability, reduced heat of hydration, and increased resistance to sulfate and alkali-aggregate reactions. Fly ash, a commonly used pozzolan in PPC, is a byproduct of coal combustion. The blending of Portland cement and pozzolanic materials results in a cementitious material with enhanced sustainability, as it utilizes industrial byproducts and reduces the environmental impact associated with cement production. PPC is widely used in construction applications where durability and environmental considerations are important factors, such as in the construction of dams, bridges, and high-performance concrete structures.

The major global manufacturers of Portland Pozzolan Cement include LafargeHolcim, Ultratech Cement, CEMEX, Heidelberg, Cimsa, Deccan Cements, Habesha Cement, Hathi Cement, China National Building Materials, Anhui Conch Cement, Tangshan
