Research Summary

Sandwich panels are composite building materials consisting of two outer layers (known as skins or facings) bonded to a lightweight inner core, creating a rigid and durable structure. The outer layers are typically made of materials such as metal, fiberglass, or high-density plastics, while the inner core is commonly composed of foam, honeycomb, or mineral wool. Sandwich panels are widely used in construction for applications such as walls, roofs, floors, and partitions due to their excellent thermal insulation, soundproofing, and fire resistance properties. They offer a cost-effective solution for achieving high-performance building envelopes while minimizing weight and maximizing energy efficiency. Sandwich panels are available in a variety of sizes, shapes, and configurations to meet the specific requirements of different construction projects, making them a versatile and popular choice in both residential and commercial building applications.
