Research Summary

Saw palmetto extracts are concentrated preparations derived from the berries of the saw palmetto plant (Serenoa repens), a small palm native to the southeastern United States. These extracts are commonly used for their potential medicinal properties, particularly in supporting prostate health and managing symptoms of benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH). Saw palmetto extracts contain a variety of bioactive compounds, including fatty acids, sterols, and flavonoids, which are believed to possess anti-inflammatory and hormone-modulating effects. These extracts are typically produced through solvent extraction or supercritical CO₂ extraction methods, resulting in concentrated forms that can be found in dietary supplements, capsules, liquid extracts, and other herbal products.
