Research Summary

Sealing coatings are specialized materials applied to surfaces to create a protective barrier that prevents moisture, gases, or other substances from penetrating or escaping. These coatings are designed to enhance the durability, longevity, and performance of various substrates, including concrete, metal, wood, and plastics, by sealing pores, cracks, and gaps. Sealing coatings can come in various forms, such as epoxies, polyurethanes, acrylics, silicones, and elastomeric membranes, each tailored to specific applications and environmental conditions. Common uses of sealing coatings include waterproofing of building structures, protection of industrial equipment from corrosion, sealing of concrete floors or decks, and preservation of automotive surfaces. These coatings play a crucial role in maintaining the integrity of surfaces, preventing damage, and prolonging the lifespan of assets in diverse industries and applications.
