Research Summary

Shisha tobacco, also known as hookah tobacco, is a specially prepared blend of tobacco used in water pipes (hookahs) for smoking. It is typically combined with flavorings, such as fruit, molasses, honey, or glycerin, which give it a sweet taste and create a smooth smoking experience. The tobacco is often moistened and cut into small pieces to enhance the flow of smoke through the water-filled base of the hookah, which cools and filters the smoke before it is inhaled. Shisha tobacco comes in a wide range of flavors, including mint, apple, grape, and more exotic blends.
