Research Summary

Silver halide photographic paper is a light-sensitive material used in traditional film photography and darkroom printing processes. It consists of a paper base coated with a gelatin emulsion containing light-sensitive silver halide crystals, typically silver chloride or silver bromide. When exposed to light through a camera lens or photographic negative, the silver halide crystals react chemically, capturing the image's light and shadow details as latent image formations. During development in a darkroom using photographic chemicals, the exposed silver halide crystals turn into metallic silver, forming the visible image on the paper. The unexposed silver halide crystals are then removed during fixing, leaving behind a permanent image on the paper with excellent tonal range, sharpness, and archival stability, making it a fundamental material in traditional photography.

The major global manufacturers of Silver Halide Photographic Paper include Fujifilm, Kodak, Canon, China Lucky Group, HP, Epson, HYMN, Polaroid, Brother, Fantac, Ilford, etc. The global players competition landscape in this report is divided into three
