Research Summary

A CPAP (Continuous Positive Airway Pressure) machine is a medical device used to treat sleep apnea, a condition characterized by interrupted breathing during sleep. The machine delivers a steady stream of air through a mask that covers the nose or both the nose and mouth, keeping the airways open and preventing pauses in breathing. CPAP machines consist of a motor that generates airflow, a hose that directs the air to the mask, and the mask itself. Modern CPAP devices often come with additional features such as humidifiers to add moisture to the air, adjustable pressure settings, and data tracking to monitor usage and effectiveness. By maintaining constant air pressure, CPAP therapy helps reduce snoring, improve sleep quality, and prevent the health complications associated with untreated sleep apnea, such as cardiovascular issues and daytime fatigue.

The major global manufacturers of Sleep Apnea Therapy CPAP Machine include BMC Medical, Elmaslar, North-Southern Electronics, Shenzhen Afkmed, Beijing Aeonmed,
