Research Summary

Sodium hypochlorite (NaOCl) is a clear, slightly yellowish liquid that is widely used as a disinfectant, bleaching agent, and sanitizer. It is produced by dissolving chlorine gas in sodium hydroxide solution, resulting in a compound that releases hypochlorous acid (HOCl) in water. Sodium hypochlorite is most commonly known for its role in household bleach products, where it effectively removes stains, whitens fabrics, and disinfects surfaces. In water treatment, it is used to disinfect drinking water and wastewater by killing bacteria, viruses, and other harmful microorganisms. Sodium hypochlorite also finds application in healthcare settings for surface disinfection and as an antiseptic. However, it is a strong oxidizing agent and can be corrosive at high concentrations, requiring careful handling and dilution before use to prevent damage to surfaces and materials. While sodium hypochlorite is effective for its intended uses, precautions must be taken to ensure safety and proper dosing in various applications to avoid adverse effects on health and the environment.

The major global manufacturers of Sodium Hypochlorite include Solvay Chem, Akzo
