Research Summary

Spandrel glass refers to opaque or tinted glass panels used in building facades to conceal structural elements such as columns, floors, and HVAC systems. Unlike transparent glass used for windows, spandrel glass is designed to match the appearance of adjacent opaque materials like metal panels or stone cladding. It serves both aesthetic and functional purposes in architectural design, providing a seamless and uniform appearance across the exterior of buildings while maintaining privacy and hiding unsightly building components. Spandrel glass is typically manufactured by applying ceramic frits or coatings to the glass surface, which can vary in color, opacity, and reflectivity to achieve the desired architectural effect. It plays a critical role in creating a cohesive and visually appealing facade while contributing to the overall energy efficiency and performance of the building envelope.

The major global manufacturers of Spandrel Glass include Saint-Gobain, Guardian Glass, NSG Group, Asahi Glass Co., Trulite Glass & Aluminum Solutions, ?i?ecam, Viracon, Oldcastle BuildingEnvelope, Vitrum Glass Group, Glasswerks, PFG Glass,
