Research Summary

A stainless pipe is a type of steel pipe made from stainless steel, a corrosion-resistant alloy containing iron, chromium, nickel, and other elements. Stainless pipes are widely used in various industries, including construction, automotive, food processing, chemical processing, and oil and gas. They are known for their durability, strength, and resistance to corrosion, making them suitable for applications where exposure to harsh environments or corrosive substances is common. Stainless pipes come in various sizes and thicknesses, with different grades of stainless steel available to suit specific requirements. Common grades include 304 (also known as 18-8 stainless steel) and 316 (marine-grade stainless steel), each offering different levels of corrosion resistance and mechanical properties. Stainless pipes are used for conveying fluids, gases, and solids, as well as for structural support in buildings and infrastructure. They are often welded or threaded to connect with other pipes or fittings, providing a reliable and long-lasting solution for fluid transportation and structural applications.

The major global manufacturers of Stainless Pipe include Marcegaglia, Fischer Group, Jiuli Group, Sandvik, Tenaris, Wujin Stainless Steel Pipe Group, Froch, Nippon Steel
