Research Summary

Surimi raw material refers to the primary ingredient used in the production of surimi, a seafood product commonly used in various cuisines, particularly in Asian dishes. Surimi raw material typically consists of fish fillets, typically from mild-flavored white fish such as pollock, hake, or cod, that are deboned, skinned, and minced into a paste-like consistency. This paste is then mixed with water, salt, and sometimes other ingredients such as starch, egg white, or flavorings to create a dough-like mixture. The resulting surimi paste serves as the base for manufacturing various surimi-based products, including imitation crab sticks, fish cakes, and seafood balls. Surimi raw material is valued for its neutral flavor, firm texture, and ability to mimic the appearance and texture of real crab meat or other seafood, making it a versatile ingredient in both traditional and modern culinary applications.
