Research Summary

Taggant ink is a type of ink that contains microscopic particles or chemical markers known as taggants. These taggants are added to the ink during manufacturing and serve as unique identifiers or markers that can be detected and authenticated using specialized detection equipment or techniques. Taggant inks are commonly used in various applications such as currency printing, product labeling, document security, and anti-counterfeiting measures. By incorporating taggants into the ink, manufacturers can create a covert means of verifying the authenticity of products or documents, thereby deterring counterfeiting and unauthorized duplication.
