Research Summary

The TCB Bonder is a piece of equipment used in the microelectronics industry for thermo-compression bonding (TCB) or welding processes. TCB welding machines often have unique designs to ensure reliable connection of micro components such as wafers, chips and electronic devices under high temperatures and pressures. These machines usually include thermal heads, temperature control systems, pressure sensors and automated control systems to ensure the accuracy and stability of the welding process. The working principle of the TCB welding machine is to place metallized solder on the surface of the device to be connected, and then bond it to the surface of the substrate under the action of heat and pressure. This soldering method is commonly used in applications such as high-density integrated circuit (HDIC) packaging, chip-scale bonding and 3D chip stacking to provide reliable electrical connections and mechanical support. TCB welding machines play a key role in the microelectronics manufacturing and packaging process, helping to achieve high-performance and high-reliability electronic device manufacturing.
