Research Summary

Trade finance refers to the financial instruments and products that facilitate international trade transactions by providing the necessary funding and risk mitigation tools for businesses engaged in buying and selling goods and services across borders. It involves various financial mechanisms, including letters of credit, trade credit insurance, documentary collections, and export financing. Trade finance serves to address the challenges of different payment and delivery terms between buyers and sellers in different countries, mitigating risks associated with cross-border trade. By providing liquidity, mitigating payment and delivery risks, and supporting the financing needs of importers and exporters, trade finance plays a crucial role in promoting global commerce and facilitating smooth transactions between parties involved in international trade.
