Research Summary

Wood flooring refers to a type of flooring material made from natural hardwood or engineered wood products. Hardwood flooring is crafted from solid wood planks, typically sourced from trees such as oak, maple, cherry, or walnut. These planks are milled to various thicknesses and widths, then sanded and finished to enhance their appearance and durability. Engineered wood flooring, on the other hand, consists of a plywood or fiberboard core with a layer of real wood veneer on top. This construction provides stability and resistance to moisture, making it suitable for installation in areas where solid hardwood may not be recommended, such as basements or kitchens. Wood flooring offers a timeless and elegant look to any space, with a variety of styles, colors, and finishes available to suit different aesthetic preferences. It is valued for its durability, natural beauty, and ability to add warmth and character to interior spaces. Wood flooring is commonly used in residential and commercial settings, providing a durable and long-lasting flooring solution with timeless appeal.
