Abstracts

Ireland has recently undergone a mini economic boom after exiting the post-bailout recession years. The unemployment rate has dropped and disposable income levels have increased. In line with rising employment and growing disposable incomes, the latest national census found that household monthly spend on takeaways rose to over EUR35.00, with under 44-year-old males in urban areas the most likely to order a takeaway. At the same time, the economic recovery saw Ireland become an urban society for...
