Abstracts

During 2016, demand for disposable adult incontinence products in France continued to be structurally driven by the ageing of the country's population as the number of people among the French population aged 65 years old and over rose by 2% over the course of the year. In addition, the advent of several innovative adult incontinence products which are more discreet, comfortable and efficient also contributed to reducing the aversion of consumers to using these products. Finally, successful infor...
