Abstracts

Positive economic conditions drove consumers' willingness to pay for non-essential items, such as apparel products. Broader access to credit through store cards issued by retail stores, low unemployment rate, and an increase in the number of women entering the labour market boosted sales. Chile also recorded the highest volume per capita consumption of apparel in Latin America in 2011. Over the review period, apparel sales in Chile, measured by volume, have been the fastest growing in the...
