Abstracts

Starting from the end of 2021, Taiwan and the rest of the world were impacted by an era of higher inflation, which led to price rises for baby and child-specific products at the end of this year, and into 2022. Despite this, parents were willing to pay more for better care for their children, given that most families had fewer offspring. When parents choose products for their babies, they consider quality and safety to be more of a priority than price, resulting in the growth of higher-priced pr...
