Abstracts

As the birth rate in Chile continued to decline, parents showed a tendency towards spending more on their children. This was in part due to increasingly busy lifestyles which leave them less time to spend with their offspring. As a result, they have started to see increased expenditure per child as a way to make up for their lack of contact time. This has led to a growing preference for value-added products, for example, lotions that contain botanical extracts such as lavender and chamomile...
