Abstracts

Baby food in Vietnam is projected to experience a further, if marginal, drop in retail volume (tonnes) sales over 2023, partly as a result of economic difficulties. The majority of Vietnamese consumers, especially in low-income households, still do not consider baby food to be an essential product type. This is because the cost of baby food, especially milk formula, can be a significant barrier for low-income parents. As a result, they are tempted to opt for more cost-effective options, such as...
