Abstracts

As something of a mature category, baked goods were seeing slow or even declining real value growth year on year of late in Western Europe. However, due to Coronavirus (COVID-19) in the region, a certain amount of foodservice consumption was moving into people's homes and consumers were also resorting to familiar basic products, such as bread, during lockdowns, helping drive sales during 2020. Baked goods will then see more muted annual growth rates over the rest of the forecast period.
